Generations are shaped by the context in which they emerge. The Gen Zs and late millennials are true digital natives, having been exposed to the internet, social media networks, and mobile systems for decades now. This generation easily sees potential in every single room and will spend an entire weekend transforming their space with hacks inspired by various social media tools. Their styling sense, preferences, and tastes are pretty unique and add a bold statement to their individuality.

The millennial generation values individuality, innovation, and creativity, especially regarding purchasing habits and interior design trends. When they are faced with the question, "style or substance?" they demand both, making their innovation and creativity different from their predecessors. If you want your spaces to look cosy, trendy, and ready for the modern contemporary world, we have a few essential tips for the home decor.

Stay up to date with trends

Colours and designs are very crucial in the home decor. A few years ago, solid and single colours were in trend. The most preferred colours for decor were from the family of pinks, whites, and yellows. These colours took over the entire world and were prevalent in fashion and home decor trends for decades. Today, it is not that people do not like this hue anymore, but it has been replaced by trendy colours and finish of the young generation now.

This era prefers colours and laminates that feel soothing to the eyes when you walk into your living spaces. We suggest considering trendy laminates to give you a sense of warmth, comfort, and peace after a hyperactive day. Today, you can choose from a vast palette of soft-to-touch, satin-finished trendy colour laminates that give your living spaces a soothing touch. Along with a pacifying experience, these laminates also come with excellent features such as crack, steam, stain, and scratch-resistant. These laminates are also equipped with anti-bacterial properties with dimensional stability and non-toxic emissions for safe and hygienic space.

Classic style with a layered twist

The modern generation prefers styles that are inspired by the older generation. They like their furniture and space to be classy but at the same time have a twist of the era their grandparents belong to. Adding woods to the interior has now become a trend. Furniture with rustic warmth is the favourite of Gen Z, which Gen X also favoured.

To elevate your living space with classic and contemporary décor, we suggest considering rustic designs when choosing laminates. The collection comes with a colour pallet created to give bold and distressed character for the interior spaces. You can refurbish your furniture and doors with rustic colour laminates, team them with light stones, and brush metals for a contemporary look. For a safe and hygienic environment in every weather, these laminates are equipped with dry heat resistance (up to 180 degrees Celsius) along with anti-bacterial properties and have zero toxic emissions.

Conclusively, the present generation prefers interiors that are an extension of the classic styles and render a contemporary design to them. They like soft colours that are easy to maintain and help them relax after a long day at work.
