

How to combine aesthetics and durability in home decor

Parul Mittal
Director - Marketing & Design
Greenlam Industries Ltd.

Interior designers often find themselves juggling to achieve a fine balance between the lifespan and design of interiors. Here are some home decor ideas that are aesthetically pleasing and integrate durability to prolong the lifespan of interior elements.

Home décor must be planned very thoughtfully whether you are re-purposing the space or thinking of some minor tweaks. There are various elements and aspects to keep in mind, such as the climate in your city and the design aesthetics. Today, the evolving technology and innovations have ensured the integration of all these elements under one roof.

Read on to know simple décor themes that offer you the best of both worlds – durability and aesthetics.

The entry of your house, through the living room, sets the entire home's tone and leaves the first impression. Therefore, a minimal and clean look is a pure blessing in disguise for such spaces. This is because calming shades give your mind, body and soul a certain level of relaxation. Throw muted shades of yellow and grey to your cushions placed on a sofa set in muted blue. These colours will instantly infuse a comforting vibe around your space. The best way to distinguish your colour scheme is by keeping your walls, door and floor crisp white.

While the visual impact of doors must not be compromised as they are some of the most visible design elements in the house, their resistance and lifespan should top your checklist. Therefore, opt for wooden doors that can stand the hostile weather and are eco-friendly. Now you can relax in your tranquil living room without worrying about your wooden doors' durability and material. Lastly, without overshadowing your colour scheme, complete the look with a white wall clock or a frame.

The majestic grandeur and simplicity of a natural element such as wood is just limitless. Wood holds power to make an unmatched statement and looks absolutely charming when used for home interiors. Moreover, when it comes to both – a longer lifespan and the aesthetic appeal, you can't go wrong with engineered wood doors with a surface finish of wood veneers or decorative laminates.

If you have cream or off-white interiors, opting for a darker wooden door-set will complement the entire ambience. Keep your area spick and span by placing minimal kitchen essentials out in the open. Make it look more modern by showcasing your silver crockery and glassware in open cabinets. Since this area needs more attention to hygiene, opt for antibacterial and antifungal laminates, for your kitchen shutters so that you and your family can stay stress-free. Top your slab with fruit bowls and a succulent to make the entire look feel re-freshening. Lastly, you can also experiment with a small seating arrangement for a comfortable cooking shenanigan.

We all have stepped into the new year with positivity and hopefulness. How about we paint this outlook all over the house to ensure every touchpoint encourages you? Spill the Pantone colour "Ultimate Gray" on your walls to add instant warmth and comfort. Since we are talking about all the earthy tones, we suggest going for a crisp yet classic white shade for doors. It will exude not only sheer panache but also a strong sense of calmness. Make your space functional and minimal; this can be done by placing a statement sofa and a mini-breakfast table in opposite directions.

We highly suggest going for a door-set solution that is highly durable, fireproof and impact-resistant and keeps safety and maintenance stresses at bay. The premium aesthetics of the wooden doors will seamlessly uplift your wooden floors and the neutral colour scheme. Complete this décor with a pop of colour, like a matte pink floor plant and transparent net curtains to let in the goodness of nature and sunlight together.

Every element of your house speaks to you and brings along a purpose to fulfil. Therefore, the three distinct décor looks are an inspiration for designing a space that brings élan and ensures durability. So, think no further and get on with curating your own dream-like haven.